

Mary F. Toro, Director
Regulatory Enforcement Division
Office of Compliance and Field Operations
U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission

Mary joined the CPSC in December 1983, as a textile technologist in the Directorate for Engineering Sciences. In 1986 Ms. Toro transferred to the Office of Compliance, Division of Regulatory Management where she was first responsible mainly for products regulated under the Flammable Fabrics Act (FFA). In 1993 she transferred within the Office of Compliance, to concentrate her work effort under the Federal Hazard Safety Act (FHSA). Her specific responsibilities included enforcement of regulations and standards under the FHSA and the Consumer Product Safety Act (CPSA) in conjunction with providing advice and guidance to the regulated industry.

In April of 2000 she was promoted to Associate Director of the Chemical, Clothing, Household Products & Tools Team. In 2008 she became Director of the Regulatory Enforcement Division. Her team advises much of the regulated industry on their responsibilities under the seven Acts and the regulations that the CPSC administers and also processes the reports made by companies under Section 15 of the CPSA.

Prior to joining the CPSC, Ms. Toro was a staff scientist with the Gillette Research Institute. Ms. Toro holds a Bachelor of Science degree in Textile Science from the University of Maryland.
